The Most Tragic Way to Lose a Pet

Have you ever thought about what would happen to your pet if a fire or flood broke out while you were not home? Would your pet survive? Could they escape? The chances are slim. Dogs and cats are shockingly helpless when it comes to disasters. They cannot open a window and jump out. They cannot dig through the carpet and crawl to safety. They are trapped.

Fire and floods are an all too common tragedy that claims homes and lives. The statistics are staggering. Every year:

- 4,000 Americans die in fires
- 40,000 pets die in house fires
- Fire kills more people than all other natural disasters combined
- Between 1999-2001 nearly 1.9 million fires were reported annually
- Close to 60,000 pets were killed or left homeless due to Hurricane Katrina
- Nearly 500 pets were separated from their owners during the Iowa floods

The Only Way to Ensure Your Pet's Safety

When an animal is petrified, they tend to hide. They may crawl under tables, couches, chairs or beds. So even if rescue workers arrive on the scene, they may have absolutely no idea that your pet is inside. Your pet will be left to slowly suffocate or drown. The thought is almost too much to bear.

But thankfully, there is a way to ensure your pet's safety.

The Rescue Rover Pet Alert Decal can mean the difference between life and death for your pet. This bright red decal alerts fireman and neighbors that your pet is inside the house. Click here to claim your free decal.
